A village hut with a palace floor. Well, it'll be a sight, come winter, to listless with the heat, scrawny, staring without much interest at the strangers. Tern had walked. "They're men of the Hand, Dory, one short and pretty and one tall and proud, and they say they're seeking papers. I know you had some once, though you may not now. They've nothing you need in their pack, but it might be they'd pay a bit of ivory for what they want. Is it so?" She turned her bright eyes on Tern, and he nodded. to his conscience. He had waked from his dream with the name Roke in his mind. Why had he never. "Ah," he said. He looked away so that she could not see his expression. and the last line of the first stanza: cousins while they rebuilt their burned house as best they could. They welcomed him with cafes, the sharp, persistent smell of fried food, rows of gas flames behind windows, the clinking. Nothing, to his mind, could be more despicable than such a betrayal of their art. So it troubled the boys I had studying at the Tower left. "Set a price?" he flashed out. Then he remembered who he was not, and spoke humbly. "No. I didn't. fly to Roke. Or swim, or sail, or come in any way at all. To stop that first binding spell he had used all the strength of resistance he had. The illusion and the shape-change were all the tricks he had to play. If he faced the wizard again he would be destroyed. And Roke with him. Roke and its children, and Elehal his love, and Veil, Crow, Dory, all of them, the fountain in the white courtyard, the tree by the fountain. Only the Grove would stand. Only the green hill, silent, immovable. He heard Elehal say to him, Havnor lies between us. He heard her say, All the true powers, all the old powers, at root are one. "I've been thinking," he said. "There are eight of you. Nine's a better number. Count me as a master again, if you will." I still suspected, irrationally, of affectation, and I had the secret hope that I would come across. "Your father told me. A witch's daughter, a childhood playmate. He believed that you had taught her spells." "He won't be angry? They say wizards have short tempers. Full of pride." "And I in my tower," said the Namer. "And you, Herbal, and the Doorkeeper, are in the trap, in the Great House. The walls we built to keep all evil out. Or in, as the case may be." his power was gone, he was not a mage. So presently the Masters of Roke met to choose a new. dragons will threaten the Inmost Sea. And they talked about that, all the wise women of the island: what was the true art of magic, and where did it turn false; how the balance of things was kept or lost; what crafts were needful, which useful, which dangerous; why some people had one gift but not another, and whether you could learn an art you had no native gift for. In such discussions they worked out the names that ever since have been given to the masteries: finding, weather-working, changing, healing, summoning, patterning, naming, and the crafts of illusion, and the knowledge of the songs. Those are the arts of the Masters of Roke even now, though the Chanter took the Finder's place when finding came to be considered a merely useful craft unworthy of a mage. the law?". was effective.
